

Re: Email client programs

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Mailing-Lists/Debian/2004-01/5637.html>

---

From: Brett Carrington (brettcarr\_at\_segvio.org)

Date: 01/31/04

Date: Sat, 31 Jan 2004 14:35:08 -0500

To: "debian-user@lists.debian.org" <debian-user@lists.debian.org>

On Fri, Jan 30, 2004 at 09:00:00PM -0800, Day Brown wrote:

> Perhaps I have not expressed myself well, but the point is, that it is > more difficult to use email now than it used to be; given the reputation > of the computer business for 'progress', that's odd.

So are you looking for a solution? Because there are plenty. Mailers like mutt and a perl script with procmail (or similar) can do all of the image-viewing and quoting you want. I get the quoted text color changed too.

No, we don't have all the fancy ANSI terminal colors. HTML is also not the way to get them. But e-mail is a way to communicate information (at least for me) and not dazzle me with terminal escape codes.

--

To UNSUBSCRIBE, email to debian-user-request@lists.debian.org with a subject of "unsubscribe". Trouble? Contact listmaster@lists.debian.org

---

- application/pgp-signature attachment: Digital signature