

Re: Firefox and Debian Testing: Getting Security Updates?

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Mailing-Lists/Debian/2005-08/1815.html>

---

From: [KS] (lists04_at_fastmail.fm)

Date: 08/17/05

Date: Wed, 17 Aug 2005 03:12:29 -0400

To: debian-users <debian-user@lists.debian.org>

a.list.address@gmail.com wrote:

- > I'm a happy user of Testing, but I'm a bit concerned about getting
- > updates to Firefox in a timely manner. The current version in Testing
- > is 1.0.4-2, which has recently-announced vulnerabilities in it. The
- > vulns (I don't like typing that word :) have been fixed in the version
- > in Sarge, 1.0.4-2sarge1. They've been fixed in Unstable as well, in
- > 1.0.6-2.
- >
- > But when will this version come to Testing? A quick look at the
- > changelog for the package shows that 1.0.5-1, which fixes some
- > security issues, was uploaded to Unstable on July 16th with an urgency
- > level of high, but four days later 1.0.6-1 was uploaded with an
- > urgency of low. Ten days later, on July 30th, 1.0.6-2 was uploaded
- > with an urgency of medium. But here it is over two weeks later, and
- > Testing is still stuck on 1.0.4-2.
- >
- > I looked in the bug tracker, but I couldn't find any good bug to
- > prevent these newer versions from moving to Testing.
- >
- > Now, I'm far from an expert, and I'm still fairly new to Debian (less
- > than a year), but it seems like something needs to change. I don't
- > want to run Unstable on my computer, but I don't want to be stuck with
- > vulnerable browsers either.
- >
- > I could upgrade Firefox to the version that's in unstable, but there
- > are two problems:
- >
- > 1) This is a poor long-term solution, having to manually upgrade
- > packages and their dependencies to fix security problems;
- >
- > 2) I can't even do that in this case, because Firefox 1.0.6-2 depends
- > on libxinerama1, which depends on libc6 >=2.3.5, but Testing is still
- > on libc6 2.3.2.
- >
- > This is simply a mess. Actually, now that I think about it, I suppose

Debian–User: Re: Firefox and Debian Testing: Getting Security Updates?

- > the reason 1.0.6–2 hasn't moved into Testing is because of the
- > dependency problem of libxinerama1 and libc6. But who knows when the
- > new version of libc6 will get into Testing? It may be a very long
- > time. In the meantime, are we Testing users supposed to keep using a
- > vulnerable version of Firefox?
- >
- > I know Testing is not supported for security updates, but for
- > high–profile packages like Firefox with high–profile vulns, don't we
- > need a solution for this problem? And upgrading to Unstable is not a
- > solution; there's a reason I and others use Testing instead of
- > Unstable.
- >

Although I'm don't have much advice for you on this topic, but I recommend you to go over to the debian–security mailing list and read the thread <http://lists.debian.org/debian–security/2005/07/msg00315.html> about mozilla–* security support state of affairs.

A very long thread on a valid topic and pretty informative.

/KS

--

To UNSUBSCRIBE, email to debian-user-REQUEST@lists.debian.org with a subject of "unsubscribe". Trouble? Contact listmaster@lists.debian.org