The "whole idea" of the GPL and Free software is to allow anyone to "add value" to what's out there. That's not what CentOS and White Box do. They take someone else's work, remove references to the people that did the work, and package it up so that you can "freely" use Red Hat's efforts in creating RHEL.

You do understand that they're required by Red Hat to remove those "references to the people that did the work", right?

Yeah, buddy, I am. I'm not an idiot, I just think what they're doing is morally wrong. Capiche?
