Anyway FC5 booted up ok when the power came back, and I ran apt-get update again just to check out whether everything was ok. I've got a big bunch of deletes from apt-get update, and the last entry is.

W: There are multiple versions of "librsvg2" in your system.

True. Looking in synaptic I have librsvg2#2.14.2-1, and librsvg2#2.14.4-1.fc5.1 .

/usr/lib shows librsvg-2.so.2 pointing to librsvg-2.so.2.14.4

Is it safe to just remove the earlier librsvg2#2.14.2-1 version from the system?

Check librsvg2#2.14.4-1.fc5.1 with rpm -V. If there's a problem, re-install it (with rpm -U --oldpackage).

Then try removing the earlier package and see what happens (with rpm -e or rpm -e --test). If anything complains, see if you can sort it out. If RPM lets you, you're very unlikely to see any real problems.

In any case, this is hardly a system-critical library.

Hope this helps,

James.
