Last time I had this some of the libraries had lost their symlinks.

I'd boot from the rescue cd, mount your partition then chroot to it.

If that fails then you can strace it to see why.

Hello everyone,

Unfortunately I have a big problem with FC6 as you can see in the topic...

It's 100% reproducible at my box. What I've done was – install FC6, then I installed with yum `kmod-nvidia` – which required newer kernel package as well. Reboot. Then I receive this **very** fatal error. I boot even with the older kernel. I find it strange.. how can this happed... I googled all over the web without feeling lucky. Any idea

suggestion would be really appreciated.

Since /bin/sh is part of bash and should be available if your / volume is mounted, it appears that your / system is not being mounted.

Have you tried to boot into rescue mode with the first install medium disc for Fedora?

Not much help I know.
