I've written to all of them before – including Citibank (citicards was mentioned in a separate answer on this thread). I got no response from CNN or Fox.

Ironically, I was shopping for a credit card when I ran into Citibank's website issues. I told them that I would not apply for a credit card from them if their Website wouldn't support my choice of Web browser. Their response: An on-line application form by e-mail pointing to their website. Nice...!

I actually had one Website administrator (<http://www.petharbor.com>) tell me that IE6 was the only "authorized" browser for viewing their site. I told them that, as a site promoting a public service relied upon by city governments, it was not their place to say which browsers were "authorized". I got no further response. I also don't use them anymore –

I guess they have enough assistance from "authorized"
browser running
people who don't mind frame based sites.

Even if it's only in a small way, I vote with my wallet when this stuff happens. Capital One has a site that works just fine. So does American Express. Citibank is not the only credit card company in town, and I figure that if they won't listen to me about this when it comes to customer service, they probably also won't listen to me about other issues if they were to come up as well...

Anyone from Citibank care to comment??

I am NOT from Citibank.

But you never said what was your preferred browser.

Wow! I re-read that a couple of times and you're right!! On Linux, I tend to prefer Firefox. I'll use Konqueror as well when it suits what I need or feel like a change.

Incidentally, none of the above sites worked very well for me using Konqueror either. I have the Greasemonkey extension for Firefox working with Fox News now. For some reason, Konqueror still isn't working with Fox.

First? You kinda' hijacked his thread with you Citibank problem. You should have started a one. Not a big deal. That happens here often. ;-)

I have read, somewhere, that Greasemonkey will allow both CNN and FOX videos when setup correctly. Keep trying. As for Konqueror? I haven't used it in years.

I did NOT apply for a credit card but I can access citibank.com with Firefox
2.0.0.1

Good luck and keep trying.

David
