I hope this is the right place for a feature request. I don't like the way keep aligned handles text in gnome right now, so what I usually do is: check Keep Aligned, and move icons in a few columns and rows that I want aligned, then uncheck Keep Aligned and move freely those columns and rows. That's ok, but when I add a new icon, it's hard to align it by hand with the existing rows and columns, and checking Keep help

Aligned messes up the way my icons were arranged.

So what I'd like is to be able to select a few icons, and have in the context menu a "Align Selected Icons" -> "Horizontally" & "Vertically". This should align only the selected icons in a row or a column.

I don't know if it's easy or not and it's not a vital feature, but it would make the overall experience more pleasurable.
