How do you know what I said was foul?

I'm going too on the simple fact that you're the first person too say that in a respectful way. I know you get the respect you're earning, but again, it's not like some of the people here were nice too me with what they said too. I was told worse things here than what I said back, and no one ever said the other should watch his mouth.

I know it seems like I'm an asshole, but I'm really not. I don't try too be, but I do try for button pushing... Which I'm not sure why really, heh. I help more people than I annoy, and I do go out of my way on websites I visit too help someone with computer problems, but I'm not trying too make it seem like I'm an Angel either, I'm not. I just want too point out I do help people on and off the list more than I annoy them. I'm not as bad as I seem. If someone here was drunk and read the things I say they would probably laugh. The list just seems way too serious, and it kind of scares me that people are so serious all the time.

Guys:

I'm not trying too piss you off, I'm trying too make you loosen up a bit.

When you're this serious all the time, the only thing you'll get out of it is valium and a risk of heart problems. Relax, enjoy your life, and only be serious when you are forced too be, like at work. Computers are only work if you make them out too be, just like life is what you make of it.

OK, I'm done lol, heh.

SuSE: Re: [SLE] Fan noise

I can't be that offensive, I've met Richard Stallman and Talked and watched, Linus Torvalds speak, and they both have a great sense of humor about them which is one reason I love Linux and GNU, they aren't serious about it and joke a lot.

That may not mean anything to some of you, but the fact that they do have a funny sense of humor, means a lot too me. They are great guys and great coders, and they make me laugh and I make them laugh.

If I calm my language and TRY too make myself a little more presentable, will you guys not attack me and call me worse names than what I've said, and try not being so serious all the time, and have a little fun?

I mean I can try and find the mails I got where I got called worse things than that, but I'm quite sure they were deleted, as they were hurtful things, and no one stopped them.
