It's awesome! I can finally ditch winblows on my laptop for good because I can now access the wireless lan at school with SuSE without having to go into the card configuration in YaST. The new network monitor/applet program picks up all available networks and allows me to choose which one to use (if more than one are around, as there apparently are in my neighborhood).

This, by itself, has made 9.3 worth it for me. Good job, SuSE! Additionally, I really dig this beagle application. Works like a champ.

While I do like to tool around with different distros to check them out, SuSE is the only one I will pay $$ for now. It's perfect for people like me who know just enough to be a danger to their own systems. I love it.
