Normally, when replying to a SuSE list, the established protocol is to post at the bottom not the top.

Yes, though that seems to be honored more in the breach, than the observance.

However, the `_preferred_` reply protocol is to `_trim_` all but the essential text from the previous post, and then to write your responses in between the judiciously selected quotations. In other words, deal with just the points that you think need responses, and delete everything else from the previous mail. Never quote footers and tag lines unless you are talking about them.

If the total of quoted text is double-or-more the amount of text that you write in the current e-mail, then you (generic "you", not you personally) are failing to abide by proper etiquette.

AFAIK, there is no way in KMail to force KMail to place the initial cursor at any other place.
