

Re: [opensuse] Banning personal attacks

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Mailing-Lists/SuSE/2008-02/msg03547.html>

- From: Tony Alfrey <tonyalfrey@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Fri, 29 Feb 2008 10:10:30 -0800
-

Stefan Hundhammer wrote:

On Friday 29 February 2008 13:49, Banning someone out of personal spite is uncalled for fascism wrote:

NOBODY noticed before when I went through numerous accounts...

Not true; I noticed immediately (along with Randall). We just have better things to do than spend a lot of time with this. But this time, I'm hoping that you might hear this feedback.

<snip>

You are a knowledgeable person. You are also an intelligent person. But clearly, the way you treat other people just sucks.

I agree with this. You simply don't understand (or want to understand) that a lot of your remarks are simply mean-spirited. This diminishes your effectiveness and it gives the list a negative tenor. This is certainly not good advertising for the linux community and for SuSE specifically. You are argumentative for the sheer sake of argument.

<snip>

But flaming people who do something wrong or who just have a different opinion is counterproductive for this community.

Precisely. This applies to any social interaction.

My usual choice is to simply ignore your input on a thread when I see that it has evolved from linux to rant. I wish others would take that approach; I suspect you would stop ranting if you received no reinforcement.

<snip>

Re: [opensuse] Banning personal attacks

—
Tony Alfrey
tonyalfrey@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx
"I'd Rather Be Sailing"
—

To unsubscribe, e-mail: opensuse+unsubscribe@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx
For additional commands, e-mail: opensuse+help@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx