

Re: interface eth0 failure – RH enterprise WS

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/alt.os.linux.redhat/2003-12/0242.html>

From: Jason Bowen (jason.bowen_at_colorado.edu)

Date: 12/12/03

Date: Thu, 11 Dec 2003 16:21:37 -0700

DMS wrote:

>
> Everything went well during the install (I used downloaded ISO's that I > checksummed) until it got the "bringing up interface eth0". I had forgotten > to plug in the ethernet cable from my cablemodem/router (DHCP) so it failed.
>
>
>
> I thought: no problem, shutdown, pulled the NIC , rebooted, used Kudzu to > remove the NIC, shutdown again, reinstalled the NIC, Kudzu found the NIC but > still encountered the long pause and failure at "bringing up interface > eth0".
>

Why'd you do this? Simply plugging the cable in and restarting the network would've solved the problem no matter what the distribution. Have you tried doing an manual insmod and manual restarting of the network? All the skills you've used with Debian should transfer over, only the locations of files and some of the installed tools are probably what has really changed.

>
>
> *I've, tried removing and reinstalling the NIC several times since and > tested the NIC on another machine to re-confirm that it works and it does.
> So it seems it's a RH problem.*
>
>
>
> Not sure if my initial failure to plug the CAT5 cable in initially, affected > things but I can't see why it would in the long run.
>
>
>
> If anyone knows what the problem is or how I can fix it, I would very much > appreciate the help. I'm stumped.
>

alt.os.linux.redhat: Re: interface eth0 failure – RH enterprise WS

>

>

> No RH phone support with my academic license and I am a RH newbie...

>

>