

Re: external hard drive -- linux

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/alt.os.linux.suse/2004-08/4983.html>

From: Gonzalo (nomail_at_nomail.com)

Date: 08/27/04

Date: Fri, 27 Aug 2004 12:00:24 -0400

j-marvin wrote:

> hi--
>
> at walmart they have seagate external drives.
>
> yast wont give me a proposal for partitioning > because (probably) i have basically one 55gb main windows > partition and a 7gb one i dont know the purpose of.
>
> so i was thinking i could get a external drive at > walmart. then let yast erase it (because it will > probably be ntfs) and then install linux to external > drive. the reason i think this is yast identifies > the drive and allows me to select it with a check > box.
>
> will i have problems with a dual boot system doing > it this way? my internal drive has windows and external > will have linux.
>
> anyone have any experience or know about this?
>
> i like this idea better than buying partition magic > because i get an extra drive out of the deal.
>
> please let me know what you think, > jim

Mandrake has now done all the work for you:

<http://www.mandrakesoft.com/products/globetrotter>

GlobeTrotter is the first Linux distribution that you can bring anywhere to transform any desktop into your desktop. GlobeTrotter consists of the Mandrakelinux distribution pre-installed on the ultra-compact 'LaCie Mobile Hard Drive.' Just connect GlobeTrotter via USB to any PC* and power up to enjoy a full-featured Mandrakelinux desktop.