

Re: Not Enough Memory Error?

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/alt.os.linux.suse/2005-10/0711.html>

From: Charlie (geezer1016_at_earthlink.net)

Date: 10/08/05

Date: Sat, 08 Oct 2005 14:32:09 GMT

Jabo wrote:

> Charlie wrote:

>

>>I think this is hopeless.

>

> I don't believe yet...

>

> *What comes to my mind is that we are still talking around in circles > about a partition, not the disk it is on.*

>

> Something in the installation process has happened, I believe from what > I've read, that you didn't monitor (chasing cat away from keyboard, > getting cup of coffee.... what ever). And now there is a x MB partition > that is trying to boot.

>

> This is why noi wanted you to test "fdisk -l"

>

> *You wouldn't see what stuff is mounted, but what partitions are visible to
> "fdisk" without applying any changes.*

>

> We just believe all your data is still there, but not mounted to the > system you boot and which we are talking about right now. You might get > stuck in some spare megabytes from some previous action.

>

> Give it a try at least, maybe booting from knoppix or so, and follow noi's > suggestion.

>

> There are still no technical parameters for us to follow, but we need them > to tell the next steps to be taken. I only say that because you did not > answer any questions on that...

>

> *In case you just ended up in a broken partition after flooding everything > else, there is still a chance to kill that partition and start over > again.*

>

Well it is all a done deal right now. The last time I tried to repair the partition everything was gone. Nothing there at all. I went ahead and installed 10.0.

alt.os.linux.suse: Re: Not Enough Memory Error?

I really hate windows but sometimes this is a little frustrating to, still I dont have to scan for spyware every 30 seconds.

Charlie