

Re: Newbie question about wxWindows

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/alt.os.linux/2004-02/0943.html>

From: Harry Phillips (harry_at_hkjsfh.com)

Date: 02/08/04

Date: Sun, 08 Feb 2004 18:07:30 +1000

Bill Staples wrote:

>>>Help anybody?

>>>

>>

>>man ldconfig

>

> God, not another holier than thou Linux guru!

>

> However wonderful they are for reference, Man pages are almost worthless

> for learning a topic from scratch since they always assume that you know > what you are looking for and are just wondering how to do it.

>

That's true.

> Next time, just assume that I have manned, helped, and googled before > asking the question.

>

Why should we assume that? There are dozens of dozens of posts where it is quite obvious that they have not manned, helped or Googled before posting. If you have done that already then you would be in the minority of people posting a question in this newsgroup.

I think that you need to read the 'Smart questions' write up. If you know how to Google then you can find it :)

--

Regards,
Harry Phillips

--- Failure is not an option,
it comes bundled with your Microsoft product.