

Re: Given Up on Linux1

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/alt.os.linux/2004-04/1430.html>

From: Mike Bothwell (mbothwel_at_swbell.net)

Date: 04/14/04

Date: Wed, 14 Apr 2004 03:32:01 GMT

Matt wrote:

> It was, by your own admission, your own inability to deal with > your your frustrations without making false accusations (ranting about > debian when you latter admitted debian was not the issue) that started the > whole mess. Since you do not seem to be adult enough to accept > responsibility for your actions,
>
> PLONK
>
>

Wrong, go reread the threads all the way back to the start. It began with sarcasm and idiocracy from sybren (and you' find examples of it in other threads of his as well). And yes, Debian was also, the issue, I just dropped it after a while and attempted to focus on Fedora Core 1. One bug at a time. Problem was, as a newbie Troll Twit, I'm not even qualified to report a bug because I'm not sure if it's a bug. I would think before you could report a bug, you wouldn't be considered a newbie, because you would have to know enough to confirm it is a bug in the software and not somewhere in the hardware or in the settings used to load the OS or to get the SCSI drivers working. I fully accept responsibility for my actions. Does anyone here? Wait, I can answer that.....Not a chance. It's always someone else who started it.

If you'll look back far enough, you'll find my posts where I was asking questions without any inflammatory comments and noone responded, at all.

Why, because it was above their heads so they didn't and wouldn't bother to take the time to respond. And no, I wouldn't expect them to.

Bit I'll tell you what, when I did inflame the Kindercare group, I at least got some responses that helped, very few. And I believe this to be the case because there are very few of you out there who really can help with the complicated issues or the issues that actualy might take some of your time.

By the way, my inability to deal with my own frustrations resulted in ANOTHER working box with Fedora Core 1 (this one) without a single inkling of help from a goddamn one of you experts.