

Re: Going with Linux was the biggest mistake...

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/comp.os.linux.misc/2003-11/2942.html>

---

From: Bob Holtzman (holtzm\_at\_hosed.sonic.net)

Date: 11/26/03

Date: Wed, 26 Nov 2003 05:27:35 GMT

In article <slrnbs5hee.689.dhbrown@hobbes.dhbrown.net>, Dave Brown wrote:

> In article <pan.2003.11.25.02.10.05.302243@comcast.net>,
> Christopher Estep wrote:
> ...(snipping much stuff, and replying to an embedded earlier post)...
>
>
>>> >> The latest: I try to install a copy of Acrobat reader on my >>> >> machine. My buddy has been using it constantly for months. I >>> >> finally get the courage (and the free time) to attempt installing >>> >> it. I install it apparently without incident, but when I try >>> >> running it, a license-agreement-type (EULA) message comes up. BUT >>> >> THERE'S NOTHING LIKE AN ACCEPT OR DECLINE BUTTON!!! There is no >>> >> way to get past this window! All you can do is read the EULA, and >>> >> when you get tired of this, kill the process. This has kind of fuck >>> >> up is not a rare incident; it is perfectly representative of the >>> >> Linux experience. Yes, all free, but hardly any of it works.
>
> *Don't blame Linux for something Adobe did. To avoid the incessant > appearance of the EULA, look in your home directory for a file '.acrorc'.
> About the last line is:
>
> *ShowUnixEula: true
>
> Change that to "false" and you'll be happier.*
>

So instead of asking for help on this group or elsewhere he gives up and whines.
I agree with him...he would be happier with Wndows!

--

Bob Holtzman

"If you think you're getting free lunch,
.....check the price of the beer!"

To reply by email remove "hosed."