

Re: wine useless, open source fails it

Source: <http://linux.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/comp.os.linux.misc/2005-11/0671.html>

alex.gman_at_gmail.com

Date: 11/07/05

Date: 7 Nov 2005 10:15:49 -0800

John-Paul Stewart wrote:

- > Indeed. This is the third time in a little more than a week that
- > alex.gman@gmail.com has posted trollish material in this very newsgroup
- > (see the threads he started about "Free VMWare Player" and "Windows and
- > Linux DVD-R Incompatibility (Rockridge Extensions?)".
- >
- > He's clearly a Windows fan (which is fine) who has no interest in Linux
- > and hence no business in this newsgroup.

What a dumbass. Why would I check out Wine, VMWare, etc.?

I've been using commercial UNIXes since before Linux and all its lying zealots even appeared on the scene.

Open Office sucks, period. Even Linus Torvalds uses PowerPoint. UnImpress from Open Office 2.0 doesn't even support tables for crying out loud. The best you can do is insert a Word/Writer document that has a table in it. As you can imagine, that's unusable: you lose all control of colors, size etc. – if you resize the fake table, the letters get squashed/stretched – how lame is that.

If you think Microsoft is paying me to say this, I can get you a great deal on the Brooklyn bridge.